History of NLP (Neuro-Linguistic Programming) At the start of the 1970s, John Grinder, an associate professor of linguistics, and Richard Bandler, a psychology student, developed neuro-linguistic programming in Santa Cruz at The University of California. It all started from their observations that individuals who had a similar educational background, experience, and training achieved different results.

~~History of NLP (Neuro-Linguistic Programming)—Research~~

The ideas and approach found in NLP draw from two main areas of thought. The first is cybernetics, a cross-disciplinary view of how systems are organised based on feedback that was developed in the 1940's and 1950's, and in which another major influence on NLP, Gregory Bateson, was a core figure. The founders of NLP, Bandler and Grinder, echo central principles of cybernetics when they say that 'the basic unit of analysis in face-to-face communication is the feedback loop' (Bandler ...
